29. - 31. soruları aşağıdaki parçaya göre cevaplayınız.

In 1637, King Charles attempted to expand the influence of the Church of England to Scotland. The Scots did not take this action kindly and attacked the north of England. The King, in order to raise funds, summoned Parliament. Parliament, on the basis of many unresolved grievances regarding personal rights while also favouring a non-military solution, opposed the King and tried to increase its own power. Charles's unsuccessful attempt to bypass parliament, by using an Irish Catholic army on Scottish Protestants, further enraged the parliament's rebellious members. Eventually, by 1642, hostilities between some members of Parliament and the King were so great that armed conflict became unavoidable. The Parliament, supported by the Scots, won the civil war in 1646, when King Charles surrendered. Parliament gained assurances of royal restraint, but the English army remained unsatisfied. War broke out again in 1648, and the army was led by the Puritan Oliver Cromwell. Charles settled his disputes with Scotland and allied himself with them. But Cromwell defeated the Scottish army, and had Charles beheaded in 1649. The Scottish army marched to London, and Parliament re-established the monarchy under Charles II in 1660.
